Podium Presentation
The President’s Powers and Check’s That Make Him Less Powerful
Quincy Jones
Faculty Mentor: Jonathan Day
Political Science

The president is supreme ruler of the executive branch, Article II of the United States Constitution gives the president certain powers. Those powers can determine the way our country is going to be ran. The president has a significant amount of influence, but is limited by checks and separation of power. The government is broken down into three branches, each branch has a certain amount of power creating a separation of power. To keep a watchful eye on each branch checks and balances are put into place to make sure no one branch abuses there power. Examining the powers of the president we will discover the checks that are put into place to keep the president from receiving absolute power and authority.