Purpose of the Course
This course has two main objectives. First, it introduces students to the Christian religion, its history, and a representative sampling of its theologians and practitioners. In studying some of the many different faces of Christianity, past and present, you can learn to:

-- deepen a capacity to perceive Christian texts, beliefs, and practices with both empathy and criticism;

-- become familiar with the diverse interpretations of the Christian Bible, diverse forms of Christian expression, and many meanings of Jesus across the globe;

-- gain a sense of the key dates, events, thinkers, and movements in Christian history;

-- identify some of the cultural, political, and personal roles played by religion.

Second, the course will introduce the study of Christianity by fostering skills in reading comprehension, writing ability, critical analysis, and creatively integrative thinking—skills which are transferable to many other disciplines and vocational situations, and useful in helping you to become an independent, lifelong learner.

Note: This course COUNTS as a writing course (W)!

Course Texts

Additional readings will be found on the Web, as handouts, or on Electronic Reserves (ERes).

*Note: if you have trouble accessing Web readings, try using a library computer or ask a librarian for assistance.

Writing Help
If you would like more assistance or feedback on your writing, don’t hesitate to contact WIU’s Writing Center in Simpkins Hall 341 (ph: 298-2815, or by email: MWCENTER@WIU.EDU). I am also available during office hours to talk one-on-one about your writing.

Course Requirements

Reading Summaries (15%)
Written summaries of the day’s readings will be collected randomly at the beginning of class throughout the semester. Your best scores on 10 of these (each worth 1.5 points) will count towards your final grade; I will collect them at least 11-12 times.

The aim of this exercise is to encourage you to keep up with the readings, to develop your skills in reading comprehension and analysis, and to stimulate class discussion. Towards this end, each day there is an assigned reading, bring to class the following (preferably one copy for instructor, one for yourself):

a) a summary of the day’s reading, in your own words (focus on the main points as you understood them, and anything else which catches your interest);

b) at least one sentence stating your reaction to the day’s reading;

c) at least two questions about the reading. These can include factual questions (like, “What does X mean?”), but should also include at least one interpretive question which probes specific issues raised by the reading—a question for class discussion. You might raise questions which compare something in this text and something else we have considered in this or other courses; or questions which evaluate the rightness or usefulness of something in the reading; or questions which reflect a creative response to the reading.

You will receive full credit for each summary if it is complete (includes parts a, b, and c above), well-written (check for grammar and spelling), and really captures the main points and key subpoints. So do not agonize over them, but do use them as practice in developing your skills in reading comprehension; they are meant to help facilitate a habit of close careful reading, and of trusting your own abilities to understand, analyze, and interrogate written forms of communication.

Late summaries will not be accepted. If you have a prior excused absence, turn them in before the class period you will miss (even if summaries are not collected that day). Summaries turned in the day after an unexcused or illness-related absence will generally not be accepted. But remember that these will be collected periodically, so only frequent absences are likely to affect your grade on the summaries.

Essays and Reflection Papers (30 %)
Specific guidelines for each paper will be handed out separately; see the deadlines in the course outline below. All papers must be typed and double-spaced; see the grading rubric for papers for more details about my expectations for papers. If you want to revise a paper, see me first during office hours; revised papers will not be accepted unless you first speak with me about your original version. Important note: Late papers will lose a half-point per weekday they are late; no papers will be accepted more than one week after the original deadline.

Exams (45%)
There will be five exams (short answer & essay)—but do not fear, this means you’ll integrate your learning in chunks rather than all at the end. The final will focus on themes from the end of the semester, but will include a few questions to help you integrate your learning for the whole course. Most questions are distributed before the exams, and some exam questions are collectively developed by the class.

- Exam on Early Christianity 10 pts
- Exam on Medieval Christianity 10 pts
- Exam on the Reformation & Protestants 10 pts
- Exam on Modern & Global Christianity 15 pts

Class Participation (10%)
Class participation includes showing up for class, contributing to class discussion, and engaging in any in-class written or group activities.

Note
If you believe you would learn better by completing a different set of assignments, please see me soon and then submit an alternative plan, in writing, by January 28. I will not accept alternative plans which only reduce the course workload. (Adapted from a syllabus note of Dan Buchanan, St. John’s Univ.)

Attendance
1) Note that a substantial percentage of your grade (25%!) will depend on your presence for in-class and group exercises and on keeping up with the readings by turning in summaries. Missing a lot of class will likely drop your grade by two to three letters!
2) Because of #1 above, there is no official attendance policy; however, I will keep track of your attendance and factor it into the class participation part of your grade.
3) Consistent tardiness or leaving class early can affect your class participation grade.
4) If a disability or the effects of medication make it difficult for you to attend class some days, tell me early in the semester so that we can work out a way to accommodate your learning needs.

Honor Code
Discussion of course materials with your peers is highly encouraged, especially in preparation for exams. Learning always involves sharing ideas and developing them together. But beyond our collective learning, independent work is expected on all journals, class exercises (except group ones), exams, and papers. Plagiarizing, borrowing, or copying another’s words or ideas, without proper acknowledgment, can earn an automatic F on an assignment or in this course.

Be sure to consult me if you are not sure about how or when to properly acknowledge the ideas and works of others. Read Hacker pp. 109-112 (especially p. 112) about plagiarism.

Disabilities Policy
In accordance with University policy and the Americans with Disabilities Act, academic accommodation will be made for any student who has a need and notifies me. It is imperative that you take the initiative to bring such needs to my attention, as I am not legally permitted to inquire about such issues. You can also contact Disability Support Services at 298-2512 for additional assistance.

Grading Scale
- A (90-100%) Excellent work
- B (80-89%) Good work
- C (70-79%) Average work; meets the course criteria adequately
- D (60-69%) Below average work; fulfills only partially the course criteria
F (0-59%) Course work does not sufficiently fulfill the course criteria.

Grading criteria for papers will be handed out separately. Remember that grades do not measure you or your potential abilities, but your mastery of skills in this particular course at this particular stage of your education!
